NEWBERRY SPRINGS • It may seem best suited for a recluse plotting to take over the world. But the dome-shaped home atop a blackened dormant volcano in Newberry Springs is owned by none other than Huell Howser, friendly host of PBS' travel show "California's Gold."

Howser's 60-acre compound along Silver Valley Road, halfway between Los Angeles and Las Vegas, is on the market for $750,000. And though the listing agent said it's only had a few bites, the unique house has certainly generated a lot of buzz.

The Los Angeles Times deemed it a "launch pad for desert living" while Curbed.com had fun with the "secret desert lair." Then HuffingtonPost.com picked up on the "space-age 'volcano house'" and Forbes magazine counted it among "America's Strange Homes for Sale."

"To the adventurous buyer: Your home has landed," Howser told Forbes, with lights from the perched abode responsible for a number of "UFO sightings" over the years.
